Rockwell and Mota

For most readers outside the United States, the figure of George Lincoln Rockwell is unknown. His thinking and works are an enigma. In contrast, in Spain there was a National Socialist patriot who became known in the Spanish-speaking world: the Catalan comrade Jordi Mota. In this issue we compare these two great men.

If it were not for the information technology we have now, we would know nothing of Rockwell outside the US. He was a fundamental figure of American politics in the second half of the twentieth century and his legacy is projected on to the twenty-first century, growing day by day as a nightmare to his murderers.

This ignorance is the result of the fierce disinformation campaign by the media, controlled by our enemies, due to the fact that he was dangerous for those who murdered him in 1967. Firstly, there was silence. If that was not possible, then slander. With Rockwell, for them, only the first was worth it.

Yes, we can highlight one fundamental characteristic of Rockwell's extraordinary personal value: we know that he showed up at a scheduled rally in Central Park, New York, even as a crowd of thousands of enraged Jews was waiting for him. Suddenly, when everyone assumed he would not show up, he made his way forward, uniformed and with the swastika on his arm, surrounded by hysterical masses brandishing sticks and stones.

Lincoln Rockwell is also part of an unusual event in the world's "extreme right" theater.

He picked up the witness of his spiritual father, the philosopher Francis Parker Yockey, and handed it over to Dr. William Pierce, leader of the National Alliance. That continuity of first-class personalities has no equal in any other country.

Rockwell founded the American National Socialist Party (American Nazi Party) in 1959, stood for election as Governor of Virginia in 1965, and planned to become US president in 1972 (at fifty-four years of age). As a commander in the US Navy he was a war hero. He was the author of two essential books: White Power, and ThisTime the World, which today can be found on the Internet (in English) as well as other numerous articles that he wrote.

The figure of Rockwell is of paramount importance in order to understand the change ex-

Hacker Attack!

Just as anyone may surmise, specialty hosting with primarily White Nationalist and National Socialist content is bound to be attacked (in an attempt toward denial of service) and Zensurfrei is no exception. Since our inception (using dedicated hosting), we have been endlessly attacked with the month of January 2018 representing only our most recent example. Two novel attack methods were tried this month so far. Both ultimately failed to achieve their goal, which was to take one of our (presumably “offensive”) hosted websites offline.

The first approach seems rather blunt and direct. Simply pay (in this case) 44,112 Internet people from all around the world, to keep reloading the target website over and over again in their browser in an attempt to overwhelm and overload our server. Apparently, these paid “workers” receive a small amount of money each time they click a link on the parent website leading to our hosted website. This method is somewhat clever, but it was clearly ineffective. Although they saturated our server at first when they caught us off guard, the necessity of having a referrer website showing in the logs (for counting how many times each worker clicked) allowed us to quickly gather all 44 thousand IP addresses and include all of them in a single IP chain drop rule, where they remain, even today. All that our customers experienced during that stunt, was maybe 10 minutes of slower than normal service.

The second approach went after a flagship website <http://nsdap.info/> and was perhaps the most sneaky method of attack used to date. Again the attack involved hundreds of workers hired in poor countries, the largest of which was Pakistan, to run specially crafted software designed to make it past our heuristic DDoS protection system. This novel method was clever, but not clever enough, as each individual IP address was generating hundreds of sockets. A normal user never generates more than maybe 25 sockets at most, so detecting the activity was easy, as was identifying (and drop ruling) the offending IP addresses which were generating these large number of sockets.

It must have been frustrating for the California liberal behind this attack to see that it had little to no effect aside from causing temporary and easily remedied errors a time or two. As a stroke of luck on our part, the frustrated liberal egalitarian exposed himself toward the end of the attack run which allowed me to identify where he was located. In this case, he was from the San Francisco Bay area so we were able to report his activity to his ISP. Because what he was doing is a violation of Comcast terms of service, after reporting the ongoing activity, the IP address went dead and we have not been bothered with this type of attack since. This is what “winning” feels like. Blow-back, especially when it blows up in one’s own face, is always a bitch.

So as you can clearly see, while others go down due to Antifa attacks, we shall remain standing and we ALWAYS WILL remain standing, even if we are the last bastion of free speech to remain standing! This we promise.

Activism in the Heartland

It was an unseasonably warm and sunny afternoon when four men and one woman gathered in Lincoln, Nebraska on Saturday, January 27th. It was a welcome intermission from negative wind chills and the previous week's snowstorm, and a chance to take off our coats and snow caps and put on our jackets. This day was our third meetup for the year, and the first public act of activism in 2018 for our people and the 14 Words. One person had driven an hour out of their way to be there, and two were from out of state.

We arrived on the steps of the capitol building late in the afternoon, with the sun setting and the pleasant day beginning to cool. Some of us put on masks, and some of us did not. We unrolled a banner provided by our friend Gerhard Lauck, stood together, took pictures, and faced the one-way traffic with this message: "It's okay to be white!" Pictures were taken. Honks of support were given. In the end, we knew that in the quiet mid-western environment we have come to know and love, the people are with us.

While we are unlike the coastal states in that public marches are less common, these actions help to build esprit de corps as well as teach us who is dependable and who can be counted on. The young men of our group meet regularly despite the distance, and we have many events planned for the year. Together we are rediscovering how to build a band of brothers who support each other and re-learn to cooperate to improve ourselves and our country even in our environment of false individualism. We hope to become better men, and through this, set the example for our families and friends, and ultimately, to revolt against the modern world—not downward, as in previous generations, but this time upward! To rebel, not by embracing degeneracy, but through self-improvement and

Send letters of solidarity! Mail is censored so stay “non-political.” Perhaps even consider a financial donation. We also need volunteers to find prison addresses and contact information for other political prisoners as well as their attorneys and/or families. - www.politicalprisoner.info

Winfried-Arnulf Priem

At the end of 2014 three “chiefly responsible” people of the Thiazi Forum were convicted of membership in a criminal organization and ethnic incitement and given probationary sentences. The head of the administration group was given 42 months imprisonment.

At the end of 2017 the trial against the second group of the in total 32 person strong enterprise team started. Winfried-Arnulf Priem (an old comrade of Gerhard Lauck) and two other people have been indicted for formation of a criminal organization, ethnic incitement, use of symbols of unconstitutional organizations, and distribution of propaganda material of unconstitutional organizations. They face a possible prison sentence of five years.

Monika Schaefer

On January 3rd, 2018, Monika Schaefer was arrested in Munich, Germany for “hate speech,” while she was quietly attending the trial of Sylvia Stolz, who herself has spoken “illegal words” in Switzerland. She was confronted during a surprise break announced only 45 minutes after the proceedings had begun. During that intermission a state prosecutor, accompanied by three armed men, handcuffed, and transferred her to a high-security facility in Munich.

An overview and discussion of Monika’s case can be accessed through Red Ice TV.

Wolfgang Fröhlich

The health of the Austrian engineer Wolfgang Fröhlich, still a prisoner in Austria, is seriously deteriorating. In a letter dated December 9, 2017, he indicates that he recently had a heart attack that resulted in the placement of three stints. Thirteen years of imprisonment for revisionism did not undermine the fighting spirit of Wolfgang Fröhlich, who continues to denounce the myth of gas chambers even from his cell, but has put his health to the test.

We encourage you to send a letter or even a simple postcard to provide support and comfort to this courageous revisionist.

Rockwell and Mota

perienced in the United States after the Second World War. He was a great admirer of Adolf Hitler, and a faithful follower of the latter's axiom on the immutability of the principles and the adaptation of tactics to the circumstances at hand, but also because with Rockwell two tendencies were united within radical forces: extremist Christianity and National Socialism.

Rockwell thought that the so-called Holocaust was the main impediment to the resurgence of National Socialism. He dedicated himself to saying in public, in the 1960s, that the Jewish Holocaust never happened. He had fought in the Second World War as a good American patriot and he never forgave his government for lying to him in order to destroy National Socialist Germany.

Decades after his assassination, Rockwell's legacy not only remains present, but also increases his influence in the United States. George Lincoln Rockwell pointed out the way forward for both the movement and for National Socialist militants, combining radical and frank action with a more calm and reflective approach that harms the enemy in their weak areas. This was to join the political and religious forces in order to forge a new man, one who does not fear the claw of the Beast.

As George Lincoln Rockwell is not known outside the US, Jordi Mota is not known outside the Spanish-speaking world. Jordi Mota was born in 1947 in Spain and died on December 18, 2016. He started his political life at the age of fifteen, in 1962. He was president of the National Socialist organization CEDADE (Spanish Circle of Friends of Europe) and director of the magazine of the same name. Its objective was the organization of an entity that, with a pro-European character, would represent and become a spokesperson for the feelings of Spanish youth. At the age of nineteen, after several failed attempts, and in union with other people, he created CEDADE, remaining as Head of the Youth Section until the change of board in 1970, when he was named President, leading a new team with an average age of twenty-six, compared to an average age of forty-five for the outgoing board.

From then on, the activity of CEDADE grew, crossing the borders of Spain, and becoming the main reference of post-war Spanish-speaking National Socialism. At that time, Jordi Mota did not have titles or positions of importance, working in manual and administrative jobs in various companies, devoting special attention to the knowledge of the worker problem. His true vocation, apart from politics, was Art, for which he felt great fondness: music, poetry and crafts were his favorite disciplines.

Supporter of the integral formation of the individual, Mota gave sports great importance, having practiced in judo, fencing, shooting, mountaineering and cycling.

After the dissolution of CEDADE, he collaborated sporadically with Spanish and foreign publications on artistic and political subjects.

Our NS comrade in Spain, Ramón Bau, said the following in an interview conducted by the magazine Nuestra Voz, (number 5, March 2004):

At age 16 I met a small nucleus of four comrades of about my age, with Mota as leader, who believed that NS did not exist in Spain. The Falangists were nothing more than a degraded body and without the possibility of contributing the essence NS. So we decided to found a legal group that was the Spanish NS example that did not exist. CEDADE was the school of National Socialism for almost twenty years. There I learned everything. In CEDADE we learned not only the essence of NS but also how to live within the norms of Honor and austerity, work and dedication, to appreciate Art and Culture, the mountains and the animals, all as part of the NS essence.

We conclude with Mota's own words:

National Socialism can nowadays be just about anything, but from the age of eleven until today I still think that National Socialism is the greatest and most beautiful socialist movement in history. It is the only one that has been able to create an authentic folk community, united by the same manner of feeling and thinking.
